

Hi. I am sitting at the computer with a half empty large drink at my side. Yesterday afternoon my wife said, "I've been calling you--you must not have heard me." I was wearing a brand new (1 day, first ever) pair of very expensive hearing aids (from Denmark, no less). And a quick feel left me in semi shock, one was gone. Oh ##$%@. I'd been gardening all afternoon, digging and moving compost, weeding, planting, in 3 or 4 places around the house. The device was small, black, and very inconspicuous. We dug and we searched and pulled out all my plantings for hours. I turned to the internet and someone had reported using a metal detector to find one. But I figured, probably correctly, that was an older one, big battery, and lots of wires. This was the latest technology, small, with a small button battery. I found your organization in a minute, asking for: club, "metal detector" Ann Arbor Michigan and called, reaching David Picard. He looked up a member in Ann Arbor, Bob Bergman and I reached him this morning. He rolled up at 4 o'clock this afternoon, a very good natured, amiable, and smart fellow. And cranked up his somewhat elderly (13 yrs.) machine. He tried to set it up based on the other hearing aid and I was disappointed to learn that it wasn't easily detectable. But he went ahead. In the first likely place, a ridge of newly weeded compost, he found a couple spots but was really interested in one, so I dug and THERE IT WAS! No way would I have found it without your skill and electronics... and friendliness and interest and eagerness to help. Thank You.
